Locke - Human Nature

09

Locke believed that if everyone is given proper opportunities he is bound to have equal mental development. According to Locke it is mental and not physical development which is valuable. He agreed with Hobbes that men has desires and want to substitute their pains for pleasures. He did not agree with Hobbes that men become quarrelsome for the sake of pleasures, savage and brutish. On the other hand he felt that the people always want to achieve ends by peaceful and rational methods. He believed that nature itself has blessed mankind with sparks of reason which motivate his actions in the darkness. It was goodwill, mutual understanding and sense of cooperation in pre-state of civil society which prevailed and governed social relations.
