

Parts of Sentence

Simple Subjects and Simple Predicates

A sentence is a group of words that expresses a complete thought.

- Every sentence has two basic parts, a subject and a predicate
 - The subject is the part of the sentence that names whom or what the sentence is about
 - The predicate is the part of the sentence that says something about the subject

- Both the subject and the predicate can consist of more than one word

- The simple subject is the key noun or pronoun that tells what the sentence is about.

- The simple predicate is the verb or verb phrase that expresses an action or a state of being about the subject of the sentence.

- Sony will perform.
- Dogs were barking.
- Sohan jumped.
- Things change.

Find the simple subject by asking who?
or what?

Robert F, a famous singer, will almost certainly perform at the party tonight.

Dogs up and down the street were constantly barking at the fighting cats.

Complete Subjects and Complete Predicates

In most sentences, the addition of other words and phrases to the simple subject and the simple predicate expands and or modifies the meaning of the sentence.

- The complete subject consists of the simple subject and all of the words that modify it.
- The complete predicate consists of the simple predicate, or verb, and all of the words that modify it or complete its meaning.

- Talented Shyam will perform his biggest hits.
- Large dogs were barking at strangers on the sidewalk.
- The athletic Michael Jordan jumped above the rim.
- Many things change daily.

Compound Subjects and Compound Predicates

A compound subject is made up of two or more simple subjects that are joined by a conjunction and have the same verb.

- And and or are most commonly used to join the subjects in a compound subject
 - Tomatoes and carrots are healthy vegetables.
- Correlative conjunctions may also be used to join the compound subjects
 - Neither tomatoes nor peppers grow

underground

A compound predicate (or compound verb) is made up of two or more verbs or verb phrases that are joined by a conjunction and have the same subject.

- Sita opened her book, grabbed a pencil, and started her homework.
- The auxiliary verb may or may not be repeated
- A sentence may have both a compound subject and a compound predicate

Order of Subject and Predicate

In English the subject comes before the verb in most sentences. There are exceptions to this normal word order:

- In commands and requests, the subject is usually not stated.
- The predicate is the entire sentence.
- The pronoun you is understood to be the subject.

- Questions frequently begin with a verb or helping verb or the words who, whom, what, when, where, why, or how.
- A sentence written in inverted order, in which the predicate comes before the subject, serves to add emphasis to the subject.

- A word in a prepositional phrase is never the subject of a sentence
- The word here or there is never the subject

You can find the subject in an inverted sentence by asking who? or what? about the predicate.

Complements

A complement is a word or a group of words that completes the meaning of a verb.

There are four kinds of complements:

- Direct objects
- Indirect objects
- Object complements
- Subject complements

Direct Objects

A direct object answers the question what? or whom? after an action verb.

- The subject of the sentence usually performs the action of the verb
- The action may be directed toward or received by someone or something
- Direct objects are nouns, pronouns, or words acting as nouns
- They may be compound
- They require

Rita served dinner.

Julie admires him deeply.

Carlos served a Mexican dinner and a fabulous dessert.

Indirect Objects

An indirect object answers the question to whom? for whom? to what? or for what? after an action verb.

A sentence can have an indirect object only if it has a direct object

- An indirect object always comes between the verb and the direct object
- If you add the word to or for in front of an indirect object, you haven't changed the meaning of the sentence

Shyam sent me a letter.

Kim saved Rita and Manu seats.

Object Complements

An object complement answers the question what? after a direct object. It completes the meaning of the direct object by identifying or describing it.

- Object complements occur only in sentences with direct objects
- An object complement usually follows a direct object
- It may be an adjective, a noun, or a pronoun

- Object complements occur only in sentences containing these or similar verbs that have the general meaning of “make” or “consider”:

appoint consider make render call elect

name think choose find prove vote

Residents find the park peaceful. (adjective)

Maya appointed me spokesperson and treasurer.
(noun)

My grandmother considers the property hers.
(pronoun)

Subject Complement

(Predicate Nominative, Predicate Adjectives)

A subject complement follows a subject and a linking verb and identifies or describes the subject.

- There are two kinds of subject complements
 - The first renames the subject
 - The second describes the subject

A predicate nominative is a noun or a pronoun that follows a linking verb and points back to the subject to rename it or to identify it further.

Sopranos are singers.

The star of the opera was she.

Many current opera stars are Italians or Spaniards.

A predicate adjective follows a linking verb and points back to the subject and further describes it.

Firefighters are brave.

Firefighters must be extremely careful.

Most firefighters are dedicated and hardworking.
